MOTIVATE ME

Activity One – Survey – Questions (Ask the questions to a partner/ discuss).

What motivates you at work?
What de-motivates you at work?
Are you good at motivating other people?
How do you stay motivated long-term?
How does a good manager/teacher know how to motivate his team?
What motivates you to get up in the morning?

Activity Two – Motivational Quotes. Choose the appropriate sentence from the choices below to describe the quotations.

1. Believe in yourself
2. Lead by example
3. Motivation isn't everything
4. Motivation is a state of mind
5. If you are not motivated you cant be happy
6. Motivation is the secret of success
7. Be strong

"Really great people make you feel that you, too, can become great."
Mark Twain
"Success is not final, failure is not fatal: it is the courage to continue that counts."
Winston Churchill
"He is able who thinks he is able."
Buddha
"Most folks are about as happy as they make their minds up to be."
Abraham Lincoln
"People who are unable to motivate themselves must be content with mediocrity, no matter how impressive their other talents."
Andrew Carnegie
Motivation alone is not enough. If you have an idiot and you motivate him, now you have a motivated idiot.
Jim Rohn
Be miserable. Or motivate yourself. Whatever has to be done, it's always your choice. Wayne Dyer

Activity Three – Motivational Slogans. - What are they? Why do we use them?

In the English language, apart from using idioms and proverbs we also often quote slogans.

Slogans were popularized through their use in advertising and then on posters, t-shirt, car bumper stickers, mugs and other publicity items.

The word slogan originally means 'battle cry'. derived from 'slogorn', which was an Anglicisation of the Scottish Gaelic sluagh-ghairm.

A slogan is a memorable motto or phrase used in a political, commercial, religious and other context as a repetitive expression of an idea or purpose.

Slogans vary from the written and the visual to the chanted and the vulgar. Their simple rhetorical nature leaves little room for detail and they serve as a social expression of unified purpose. This familiar repertoire of social reference allows people to unite behind an idea, which they understand easily. This makes them very useful for motivational thoughts.

- Live your life
- Attitude is everything
- Alive and kicking
- Failure is not an option
- Be yourself
- Believe and achieve
- Yes we can
- No guts no glory
- No pain no gain
- Refuse to lose
- Whatever it takes
- Don't worry be happy
- Never give up
- Reach for the stars
- Don't sweat the small stuff
- No worries
- Shit happens

Which of the above expressions do you like the best?
Do you use motivational slogans yourself?
Which of these slogans would apply best to your beliefs?
Which would you use to motivate other people?
Can you find your own slogans?

Activity Four – Being Concise.

Slogans work well for motivating people because they are concise and easy to understand.

In general in English we prefer to express ourselves with shorter sentences than the French. This is particularly true in any kind of business communication. We are concise and to the point but always polite.

French is an abstract language whereas English is very concrete. French people are all educated to be analytical, (France is the only European country where philosophy is a mandatory course part of the high school program.)

As an obvious result of their education, French people translate an action using nominal forms revealing their analytical minds. They attach more importance to conceptual notions. On the other hand, Anglo-Saxons are pragmatic thinkers: they chronologically describe actions, this shows that they value facts. English has short sentences and simple syntax using the repetition of a word or a group of words (using pronouns such as it, they, this, that, etc.) at the beginning of several consecutive sentences. French usually has long sentences with complicated syntax, which involves the use of relative clauses (subordination) and also a lot of connectors, unlike English.

Think about it – which sentence hits harder?

- In life those who abandon their goals will not achieve them even when they might have been able to which is why you should not give up on your objectives until you succeed.

- Never give up!

To motivate a team or indeed to motivate your team mates, you will need to understand their needs, find what motivates them and then communicate to them that they will get the results they desire through a certain course of action. Being concise makes your message much clearer.

Activity Five – Situations. Simulate the following situations

1. You meet with a team member who seems to have lost motivation.
2. You are a sales manager in a company and you organise a meeting with your whole team in order to fix their objectives for the new season.
3. You try to motivate a colleague who is feeling that they are not getting anywhere in their career.
