One team will be on one side of the row and the other team on the other side. Your objective is to ask the air hostess (from the opposite team) a really difficult question, or for something really complicated (a special drink, a special request etc.) as she comes past. Everyone gets a turn being the air hostess. Your teacher will attribute points to each team for how difficult their requests are. Go on - stress the hostess!

Activity Six - Memory Game (for group lessons)

Now your teacher is going to bring the trolley into the room, like an air hostess! You will have a minute to look at what is on it and write a list of the objects in English, then you have to write a list of all the objects. Let's see who remembers the most. (You can use a dictionary for this exercise).

Activity Seven - Role Plays
Act out the following role plays.

A/ You get onto the plane and sit down in your allocated seat. The person sitting next to you has the window seat. As the flight continues they pull down the blind and then go to sleep. They snore loudly and even start to put their head on your shoulder. You decide to wake them up and ask if you can look out of the window.

B/ Their is some turbulence and you are very afraid of flying. You ask the air hostess for something to calm you down but she won't give you any alcoholic beverages because she thinks you have had too many already.

C/ You arrive at the departure gate just on time but with not much time to spare. The airline representative tells you that boarding has just closed. Apparently the flight was overbooked. You try to convince her to le t you onto the flight.

D/ You are in the first class section of the plane near an emergency exit. You have your bag on the floor . The air hostess wants you to put it in the overhead locker but you think that this is unreasonable because there is a plenty of room. An argument follows.
